VOL 14 out of print

Every person born in the 20th century, has theoretically, many billions of ancestors. However, it is impossible for anyone to have all of their ancestors who are all different people. Everyone's ancestry is filled with "duplicates". These "duplicates" were particularly common in England between 1066, when William the Conqueror invaded England and 1630, when the Great Migration to America began. This has been called, "Pedigree Collapse".

The proof of "Pedigree Collapse" can be demonstrated by making mathematical calculations of the theoretical number of ancestors of a person born in 1600 (Mary & John era) and one born in 1975, using 25 years per generation. When William I took a census in England in 1066 it was recorded in the famous Doomsday Book. This showed that the population was about 1.1 million. A person born in 1600 would have had about 1 million, theoretical ancestors, back 20 generations, between 1100 and 1600. This number of ancestors would have been equal to nearly the entire population of England in 1066. The English population was not greatly mobile between 1100 and 1600, due to difficulty to travel, so a person born in that era, in the West Country of England (Dorset, Devon and Somerset), descended from a population that was largely confined to that area. The population in the West Country was probably no more than a few hundred thousand of the 1.1 million people in England in 1066.

The "Pedigree Collapse" is even more evident when calculating the theoretical ancestors of a person born in the West Country in 1975. This person would have had 1 billion ancestors in the 30th generation back (1200), when the West Country had only a few hundred thousand people.

English Population Estimates

Time Period	Estimated Population
Roman Times	1 million
1086 Doomsday Census	1.1 million
1086 - 1300	Period of rapid growth
1300 - 1500	Period of decreasing growth
1603	4.1 million
1700	5.5 - 6 million

Population in West Country

County	1801	1961 Census
Somerset	150 200/sq. mile	599,046	371/sq. mile
Dorset	100 150/sq. mile	313,460	321/sq. mile
Devon	100 150/sq. mile	823,751	863/sq. mile

If you trace back far enough, "pedigree collapse" happens to everyone. Think of your personal family tree as a diamond-shaped array. Theoretically, as you trace your pedigree back, the number of ancestors in each generation increases up to a point, then it slows and finally collapses. Ther is not a smooth pattern because there may have been collapsing periods and later spurts, due to wars, famines, plagues, migrations, etc.

One actual case of this phenomenon is Alfonso XIII of Spain (1886-1941) who had only 10 great-great-grandparents, rather than the usual 16, due to inbreeding in the royal family. If we could trace back far enough we would find all descendants were members from the first human tribe in some Mesopotamian village or some people may believe Adam and Eve.

NUMBER OF THEORETICAL ANCESTORS OF EVERY PERSON

Following is a table that shows how many theoretical ancestors has in each generation and totals to a given year. There is duplication in these figures because everyone is descended more than once from many ancestors. This chart is compiled for a child born in 1600 ("Mary & John" era) and one in 1975. ?
